Jared Marx is a partner at HWG LLP, where his practice focuses on complex litigation, government investigations, and appeals.

Government and Internal Investigations

Jared conducts internal investigations for companies and represents companies responding to government investigations, and believes his success in doing so comes from learning his clients' businesses in granular detail. He has specific expertise in representations that involve complex technology, accounting, and finance issues, as well as investigations initiated by various arms of the Federal Communications Commission.

Complex Litigation

Jared represents businesses and individuals in civil and criminal litigation on a wide range of subject matters, including contract disputes, compliance with regulatory regimes, and alleged violations of federal criminal law. Jared has successfully represented clients in arbitration and trial courts, including a recent win before a JAMS arbitrator that included a grant of all requested relief, plus an award interest and attorneys' fees. He also has particular experience in representing clients in litigation related to the telecommunications industry, including claims under the Telephone Consumer Protection Act.

Appellate Litigation

Jared regularly authors federal and state appellate briefs, including briefs filed in the United States Supreme Court. He has argued in the Federal Courts of Appeals for the D.C., 5th, and 8th Circuits, and has represented companies, individuals, and sovereign nations in numerous successful appeals.
